I have the prospect of very great happiness before me. I love him more than I can say, and shall do everything in my power to render this sacrifice—or such is my opinion—it is as small as I can. He seems to have great tact, a very necessary thing in his position. These last few days have passed like a dream to me, and I am so much bewildered by it all that I hardly know how to write. But I do feel very happy. It is absolutely necessary that this determination of mine should be known to no one but yourself and Uncle Ernest until after the meeting of Parliament as it would be considered otherwise neglectful on my part not to have assembled Parliament at once to inform them of it.

I wish to keep the dear young gentleman here till the end of next month. Ernest's private pleasure gives me great delight. He does so adore dear Albert.

Ever, dearest Uncle, your devoted niece,

V. R.

The King replied that he had been convinced for years that the Union would be the best Victoria could form, and a happy one for both.

Prince Albert's own feelings on the subject are revealed in a letter to his grandmother, the Duchess of Gotha, to whom he wrote as follows:

"The subject which has occupied us so much of late is at last settled. The Queen sent me alone to her room a few days ago, and declared to me in a genuine outburst of love and affection, that I had gained her whole heart, and would make her intensely happy if I would make her the sacrifice of sharing her life with her, for she said she looked on it as a sacrifice; the only thing which troubled her was that she did not think she was worthy of me.

The joyous openness of manner in which she told me this quite enchanted me, and I was quite carried away by it. She is really most good and amiable, and I am quite sure Heaven has not given me into evil hands, and that we shall be happy together.

Since that moment Victoria does whatever she fancies I should wish or like, and we talk together of great detail about our future life, which the promises we make to each other are as possible."

The marriage of the royal lovers took place on the 10th of April, 1840. The Queen's tender affection for her husband, and the emotions awakened by the event, are poetically expressed by an entry in her journal on the departure of his family after the marriage:

"He said to me, that I had never known a father, and could not therefore feel what he did. His childhood had been very happy. (Princess the hereditary prince, who remained some time in England after his brother's marriage,) he said, was now the only one remaining here of all his earliest fits and recollections; but if I continue to love him as I do now, I could make up for all. He never cried, he said, in general, but Alveson and Keworth, (they had accompanied the Duke to England, and now left with him) interested so much that he was quite overcome. Oh, how I did feel for my dearest precious husband at this moment! Father, brother, friends, country—all has he left, and all for me. God grant that I may be the happy person, the most happy person, to make this dearest, blessed being happy and contented. What is in my power to make him happy I will do."

It appears that efforts were made to displease the Prince of that authority in the domestic circle which properly belongs to the head of a family; but, we are told, "the Prince himself easily saw the necessity of his asserting that authority. In my home life," he writes to Prince Lowenstein, "I am very happy and contented; but the difficulty in fitting my place with the proper dignity is, that I am only the husband, not the master in the house." The subjoined extract is of interest in this connection:

"Fortunately, however, for the country, and still more fortunately, for the happiness of the royal couple themselves, things did not long remain in this condition. Thanks to the firmness, but at the same time gentleness, with which the Prince insisted on filling his proper position as head of the family—thanks also to the clear judgment and right feeling of the Queen, as well as her singularly honest and straightforward nature—but thanks more than all, to the mutual love and perfect confidence which bound the Queen and Prince to each other, it was impossible to keep up any separation or difference of interests or duties between them. To those who would urge upon the Queen that, as sovereign, she must be at the head of the house and family, as well as of the state, and that her husband was, after all, but one of her subjects, Her Majesty would reply that she had entirely engaged at the altar to "honor" as well as to "love and loyalty," and this sacred obligation she could not set aside to limit nor retire away."

From the first the Queen consulted her husband on all publications, and soon came to place implicit confidence in his judgment and act in all things on his advice. He prudently kept wholly aloof from political parties, and viewed all questions from a patriotic standpoint.

When the Princess Royal was born, "for a moment only," the Queen says, "was he disappointed at its being a daughter and not a son. During the time the Queen was laid up his care and devotion," the Queen records, "were quite beyond expression." He was content to sit by her in a darkened room, to read to her, or write for her. A memorandum by her Majesty says:

"No one but himself ever lifted her from her bed to her sofa, and he always helped to wheel her on her bed or sofa into the next room. For this purpose he would constantly, when sent for, from any part of the house. As years went on, and he became overwhelmed with work (for his attentions were the same in all the Queen's subsequent confinements) this was often done at much inconvenience to himself, but he came even with a sweet smile on his face. 'In short,' the Queen adds, 'his care of her was like that of a mother, nor could there be a kinder, wiser, or more judicious nurse.'

Female Medical Colleges:—We have received the annual announcements of the New York and New England Medical Colleges for women, located, one in New York and the other in Boston. The former, which is a new institution, numbers twenty-six graduates. The number of graduates at Boston is not given. Both are under the instruction of full faculties. The New York institution will begin its fifth annual term of 20 weeks, at the College in 12th Street, two doors east of Fourth Avenue, the first Monday in November. Address the Dean, Mrs. C. S. Lovig, M. D., 341 West 24th Street, N. Y., or the Secretary, Mrs. C. F. Wells, care of Fowler and Wells, N. Y.

The New England Female Medical College begins its twentieth annual session of seventeen weeks the first Wednesday of November.

BROWN UNIVERSITY.

We resume our review of the history of the Institution where we left it yesterday. The College Charter was first discussed at a meeting held in this city in July, 1763, at the house of Deputy Governor Gardner, when about fifteen gentlemen, members of the Baptist denomination, met together for that purpose. A rough draft of the charter was read at that meeting, the tenor of which was that the control of the institution was to be in the hands of the Baptists; but the meeting, after a trial at the September term of the Supreme Court, opened a complaint for keeping a disreputable house. Since Miss Stent's imprisonment, her mother and a little daughter, some four years old, together with a girl named Jenie, Major have occupied the house from which Louisa was taken when arrested by the Baptists; but afterwards the Rev. Ezra Stiles having been requested to assist in the matter, its completion was left mostly to him. When the Charter was read before the legislature, that it might pass into a law, it was discovered that it had been so constructed as to throw the power out of the hands of the Baptists. The meeting was therefore arrested by Hon. Daniel Jencks, a member of the Assembly, and the Charter was entrusted to him. He carried it from Newport, where the Assembly was then in session, to Providence, and lent it to Jabez Bowen; and afterwards it could not be found, and for the space of just one hundred years that most important document was lost, when it was fortunately discovered by Rev. Charles Howard Malcolm. Upon the loss of the original charter, which the most diligent search then made could not discover, a new charter was written. Thomas Egnes, physician, son of Rev. Nicholas Egnes, who had been pastor of the Second Baptist Church in this city, was added to the Committee for framing the Charter, and gave much care to the matter, so that the new charter was passed by act of Assembly in Feb. 1761.

It is extremely remarkable that this important manuscript, which the most diligent search could not for a century find, should have been discovered by Rev. Mr. Malcolm, of this city, in the very year of the one hundredth anniversary of the College. Into whose hands it fell after it was lent to Mr. Bowen at Providence, and by him to a third person, must now be a matter of conjecture; but Mr. Malcolm discovered that it was in possession of Rev. Dr. Sprague of Albany, and upon the proper representations being made, that gentleman surrendered the document, presenting it to the University. It was found just in time to be used by President Seus in his centennial discourse, and by Mr. Gould in his memoir of President Manning, and his history of the University; and it completely decides, and in favor of the Baptists, by its own internal evidence, a question of debate which had been agitated for a hundred years.

Upon the death of Dr. Manning, the first president of the college, Rev. Jonathan Maxey was chosen his successor; who, after a brilliant presidency of ten years, was in turn succeeded by the Rev. Asa Messer. The advantages offered students were very great, considering the times; while the cheapness of the college course seems to us in these days of high prices, almost ludicrous, tuition being then only twelve dollars a year, and board one dollar a week. Dr. Messer resigned the presidency in 1826, and was succeeded by the Rev. Francis Wayland. After a presidency of twenty-eight years, during which time the University made rapid growth in every department, Dr. Wayland resigned. He was succeeded in office by the Rev. Barnes Sears, in 1855. Dr. Sears has recently resigned, in order to accept a position of cast importance, sustained by the Peabody Fund, in promoting the educational interests of the South; and the University is now looking for another president.

Fortunately, however, for the country, and still more fortunately, for the happiness of the royal couple themselves, things did not long remain in this condition. Thanks to the firmness, but at the same time gentleness, with which the Prince insisted on filling his proper position as head of the family—thanks also to the clear judgment and right feeling of the Queen, as well as her singularly honest and straightforward nature—but thanks more than all, to the mutual love and perfect confidence which bound the Queen and Prince to each other, it was impossible to keep up any separation or difference of interests or duties between them. To those who would urge upon the Queen that, as sovereign, she must be at the head of the house and family, as well as of the state, and that her husband was, after all, but one of her subjects, Her Majesty would reply that she had entirely engaged at the altar to "honor" as well as to "love and loyalty," and this sacred obligation she could not set aside to limit nor retire away."

During the administration of the five presidents of the college there have been 2,277 graduates, as follows:—under Manning's 165; Maxey's 227; Messer's 693; Wayland's, 812; Sears's 390. By adding all who have been received into the fellowship of the college, but have not graduated, the number is increased to 2,815; of whom 1,523 are now living, scattered over all parts of the globe, and representing with distinguished ability all the learned professions, and most of the callings of life. More than one fourth of all the graduates, making 553 in number, have been ordained to the work of the Christian Ministry; a list of this number, and all the names of the clergymen, is to be found in the "Bible Letters" in the University of Pennsylvania; and most of the callings of life.

The price of tickets, as announced in our advertising columns, is placed at a figure which will enable the patrons of Opera an opportunity to hear in one evening a company, any one of whom would give concert worth the admission price. The tickets are to be sold by subscription, and a sufficient number must be subscribed for this week to secure the performance. The agent is at the Opera House, where he can be seen.

Yesterdays' Alarm, of New York, Capt. A. G. Kinghead, arrived here for the first time this season. The Alarm belongs to the New York Yacht Squadron.

The Alarm, of New York, Capt. H. S. Hatch, also arrived yesterday, for the first time this season.

Yesterdays' Alarm, of New York, Capt. A. G. Kinghead, arrived yesterday from the Eastward.

The Silver, of New York, Capt. E. S. Dodge, dropped in, yesterday, having a party of old River gentlemen on board—the Captain's friends, bound on a pleasure cruise.

The Dream, a sloop-rigged boat of twenty tons, built at Green Point, N. Y., last year, has been sold to Gen. Curtis, of Boston, and bound here yesterday on her way there.

The older Bill remained in the harbor, last evening. Bonnett's yacht, the Dantess, sailed yesterday morning for the Eastward.

The Wedge and Able Vocette are still here.

Gen. Grant's acceptance of the office of Secretary of War removes the question of his relation to the President's policy. He has retained Sheridan whom Mr. Johnson wished to remove, and he expressed to Mr. Stanton his high appreciation of the ability and patriotism with which he administered the war department. It is possible he assumes his new office in obedience to the wishes of his superior, and not as an endorsement of Mr. Johnson.

Our readers will observe the excursion of the United States to the Camp ground, advertised in this day's paper.

"THE WAY OF THE TRANSGRESSOR IS HARM."—This saying of the Scripture is forcibly brought to mind by an incident of the week. Mrs. Mary Stent whose death we announced on Monday was the mother of Louisa Stent who is now in jail awaiting trial at the September term of the Supreme Court, upon a complaint for keeping a disreputable house. Since Miss Stent's imprisonment, her mother and a little daughter, some four years old, together with a girl named Jenie, Major have occupied the house from which Louisa was taken when arrested by the Baptists; but afterwards the Rev. Ezra Stiles having been requested to assist in the matter, its completion was left mostly to him. Nicholas Egnes, who had been pastor of the Second Baptist Church in this city, was added to the Committee for framing the Charter, and gave much care to the matter, so that the new charter was passed by act of Assembly in Feb. 1761.

The scene at the house whose ways lead down to death, was solemn and unusual.—The Rev. Mr. Malcolm, accompanied by Deacon Hazard, attended and held a service at the house, and the agony, remorse and penitence of amendment of the fallen woman at the side of her mother's coffin, were something awful to witness, and in a most impressive manner verified that saying, "Holy Hell," so constantly and daily being verified, that "the way of the transgressor is害."

ARRESTED.—Last night, at a very late hour, two young men under the influence of that "enemy" that "steals away their souls," attempted to break into the house, No. 68 Broad street, of which Louisa Stent, now in jail, was the proprietress. The house was in charge of the girl Jenie, and the little child of Miss Stent, being the sole occupants. Being denied admission, the young men proceeded to break in at a window. The girl Jenie cried out to them, "Don't break in, the Rev. Mr. Malcolm is here." The young men then fled.

The girl Jenie cried out to them, "Don't break in, the Rev. Mr. Malcolm is here." The young men then fled.

ARRESTED.—Last night, at a very late hour, two young men under the influence of that "enemy" that "steals away their souls," attempted to break into the house, No. 68 Broad street, of which Louisa Stent, now in jail, was the proprietress. The house was in charge of the girl Jenie, and the little child of Miss Stent, being the sole occupants. Being denied admission, the young men proceeded to break in at a window. The girl Jenie cried out to them, "Don't break in, the Rev. Mr. Malcolm is here." The young men then fled.
